

Benedicta Marzinotto is Adjunct Professor at the Johns Hopkins University and Assistant Professor of Economic Policy at the University of Udine.

She has been a Visiting Professor at the College of Europe since 2009, where she teaches EU Macroeconomic Policies, and is also a member of the Academic Council.

Prior to that, she worked as economist at the European Commission's DG for Economic and Financial Affairs and was Research Fellow at Bruegel and in the International Economics Programme at Chatham House. She held visiting positions at the European University Institute, the Université Libre de Bruxelles, the Free University of Berlin and the Business School at the University of Auckland. She obtained her PhD and MSc from the London School of Economics and Political Science.